It has been assumed that because the smut of wheat and oats can be prevented by immersing the seed in hot water or a solution of some fungicide, the same method is applicable to corn. But it is not true, and for the reason that the method by which the corn smut attacks the plant is very unlike that of most of the other cereal smuts.

"It has been found out at the Indiana Experiment Station that the smut does not attack the plant through the seed, but like wheat rust it starts in the leaves and stems wherever the spores are carried by the wind and find lodgment and sufficient mois-The work of fitting up the locomotives and passenger equipment of the Peoria & Eastern for heating trains by steam has ture to enable them to germinate. effect upon the amount of smut in the crop; and experiments already carried out substantiate this deduction. It is equally evident that meteorological conditions will have decided influence. But the farmer cannot control the weather. "Two things can be done to decrease smut in corn. The growing crop can be sprayed with a suitable fungicide and the entrance of the smut into the plant pre-vented. That this can be made effective is shown by experiments at the Indiana station. But it is an expensive and troublesome method. The other, more convenient but less thorough method, is to gather and destroy the smut, and thus eventually rid

The best time to gather the smut is just before the ears silk, when the fields should be gone through and every sign of smut removed, being careful not to scatter it upon the ground, or in any way let the spores get free. The gatherings must be burned or deeply buried to certainly destroy the smut. One or more later gathering should also be made. PROFESSOR BEMIS DISCUSSES EARLY BIMETALLISM.

Does Not Believe in Jevons's Theory of Equalization of Values Except Many Governments Combine,

Prof. Edward W. Bemis continued his he operating department is making some the university extension course at the Plymouth Church last night. The special branch of the subject under consideration was "Bimetallism Prior to 1873." Professor Bemis first touched upon the world's production of gold and silver in the ancient world and in modern times. Professor

Bemis said, in part: "We are to consider to-night the use of the precious metals as money. We have seen that while banks perform some of the functions of money, they do not perform all its functions, and that there is an increase in the need of money. Silver seems to have been used first, but both were used, and it is hard to prove which was used first. We know that in the history of the early Roman empire silver was used, but gold was introduced as the empire became

Speaking of the first great money famine know to history, he said: "In the early days of the Roman empire slaves were there were no slaves left to operate the mines, and coinage ceased. Rome appointgiven the owner what was reasonable for ed tax-gatherers to go into the previnces his property, he would further consider the matter, and if he found the claim of the property holder to be just he would do what supply was exhausted. The people did not of "Silver Legislation Since 1872." A very know much about mining, and there was a scarcity of the output of the metals. There came to be a famine of money, and the these discussions as in the lectures themmetals increased more and more in value. The condition of things became ten times as had as anybody to-day thinks they were during the panic of 1893."

He'said that after the decline of the Roman empire the nations to the north were not much given to engage in trade, and, having no great need of money, got The appended bulletin, prepared by Mr. along very well without it. It was during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries that the Italian banks arose. They did not entirely relieve the difficulty, and the world welcomed the discovery of silver in Mexico This relieved the monetary panic and caused gold and silver to fall in their exchange relation with the commodities of ffe. Commodities rose in value until there was a more equal relation between them When it came to a consideration of the term "bimetallism," the Professor held that the word was not equivalent to a "dorble standard." He quoted from Andrews: "contention is that, under bimetallism, a ing the period from 1856 to 1860 there was every $1 of gold, yet there was only a dif-ference of 2 per cent. between the market ratio of the two metals in the different periods. He seemed to think the quantity of either metal mined had nothing to do with their relative market values. Professor Bemis recited some of the attempts made by other countries to establish fixed ratio between the values of the two metals and the effects that follow those efforts. He said: "England had been on a silver basis, but in the latter part of the seventeenth century she began to coin gold upon a ratio which was different from that of the continent. The ratio upon the continent was about 14½ to 1. England fixed the ratio at about 15½ to 1. This made it cheaper to pay debts in gold than it did to pay them in silver. Silver was, therefore, exported in silver. Silver was, therefore, exported from England and gold used to pay debts During the Napoleonic wars England issued a large amount of paper money. About 181 this paper money was withdrawn, creating a great stringency. In 1816 Holland changed her ratio and overvalued silver, in comparison with the French ratio, which had become 15 to 1. Holland made the ratio between 1516 and 16 to 1. That made Holland a gold country. It became cheaper to pay debts in gold than in silver. This action of England and Holland complicated affairs

Professor Bemis exhibited a chart show ing how closely the two metals maintained their parity. Gold fluctuated less than per cent., most of the time less than 3 pe cent., prior to 1873.

The Professor took up Jevons's theory substitution, or compensation. In eff Jevons's theory is that when gold is high people will pay debts in silver, and vice versa. This tendency has the effect of en-hancing the demand for and the value of the cheaper metal and lessening that of the dearer until their values become equal. The Professor holds this will prove true only when enough governments are united free coinage of both metals and they and their people are the chief consumers of
